Dezi Primous-Gillon (they/them) is an educator, artist, and client services coordinator currently residing on the unceded territories of the Council of Three Fires. After graduating Augustana College in 2016 with a Religion and Sociology double major, they went on to study liberation theology and sexual ethics at Union Theological Seminary. Their spiritual and political practices are cultivated by eco-womanist and black feminist frameworks and are also situated in the intersection of healing justice, ecology, and womanism.

As an outdoor enthusiast with a deep fondness for sci-fi and fantasy, they believe these genres will help folks unfasten a radical imagination of what is possible. They will be at Augustana discussing their vocational journey and experiences as a youth worker, community organizer, and client services provider for abortion seekers.
